

A clean break from Doing Business rankings

By Jonathan Pryke and Robin Davies
25 June 2013

An Independent Review Panel established to comprehensively review the World Bank's annual Doing Business report released their final report on Monday, calling for the Bank to "make a clean break" with the practice of ranking countries in the report on the grounds that the results might be misleading and were sometimes not objective.

The Doing Business report, now in its 10th year, measures and analyses regulations that apply to small and medium-sized local businesses in 185 economies (see the 2012 rankings here). It is based on 10 indicators and updated annually. Considering its rankings are, according to review panel chair Trevor Manuel, "the leading tool to judge the business environment of developing countries", and carry enormous weight with governments, media outlets, researchers and development organisations, the call for an end to the rankings system is a big deal.

The review panel found that the report relies on a narrow information base, uses flawed data-collection methodology, is not designed in such a way as to help countries improve their rankings and has insufficient oversight. It recommended continuing the report, minus the rankings, and made a series of other recommendations for change. For example, a peer-review process will be introduced, the methodology fixed, transparency increased and oversight and management arrangements clarified.

The World Bank has yet to respond to the Panel's findings. Interestingly, Jim Yong Kim released a statement on 7 June about the review process, in which he said, "rankings are part of [the report's] success".

About the author/s

Jonathan Pryke

Jonathan Pryke worked at the Development Policy Centre from 2011, and left in mid-2015 to join the Lowy Institute, where he is now Director of the Pacific Islands Program. He has a Master of Public Policy/Master of Diplomacy from Crawford School of Public Policy and the College of Diplomacy, ANU.

Robin Davies

Robin Davies is an Honorary Professor at the ANU's Crawford School of Public Policy and an editor of the Devpolicy Blog. He headed the Indo-Pacific Centre for Health Security and later the Global Health Division at Australia's Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade (DFAT) from 2017 until early 2023 and worked in senior roles at AusAID until 2012, with postings in Paris and Jakarta. From 2013 to 2017, he was the Associate Director of the Development Policy Centre.

Link: <https://devpolicy.org/a-clean-break-from-doing-business-rankings-20130625-4/>

Date downloaded: 28 March 2024

Australian
National University

The Devpolicy Blog is based at the Development Policy Centre, Crawford School of Public Policy, College of Asia and the Pacific, Australian National University.